Former teachers were discussed; school trips; ball games and tournaments; the Class of '62 starting the first school newspaper; the Senior Class Play, Old snapshots that "happened" to appear made these memories even more vivid.

Class President, Barry Beale, called the gathering to order for a short meeting. After reading the original class prophecy and a short quiz on such trivia as class flower, motto, etc., the roll call showed thirty-six (36) members present - out of a graduating of seventy-one (71). One class member, Jean Brown Ogg, had passed away since graduation and her class mates voted to give a book to the Appomattox County Library in her memory. The class also voted to write the School Board agreeing with the suggestion to name the new high school for the late Earl Smith.

Teaching methods being discussed and include large group instruction, small group instruction and independent study. The teachers are revising planning and management techniques so as to incorporate the "Standards and Objectives For Quality Public Education" enacted by the 1972 General Assembly.

Discussions with the entire faculty are being held concerning the change in the organizational pattern for sixth year pupils. The program utilizes the block of time approach to instruction there by creating greater flexibility so that teachers can continue to meet the individual learning needs of all pupils.

The faculty will continue to expand its emphasis this year on individualized instruction which will provide an instructional program allowing each pupil to move at his own pace through a responsive learning program which provides for differences in achievement and ability levels. Differences in the rate of learning and for behavorial and attitudinal objectives. Concentrated efforts to use a wide variety of techniques in the teaching-learning situation, development of curriculum materials and learning options will lead to self-directed and self-initiating learners in a continious progress educational program.

Ag Ed Instructor, Barry F. Sauls and Physical Education Instructor Faris Lenon utilized filmstrip previewer and cassette recorder to study methods for meeting individual students needs.

Mrs. Pat Torrence, assistant Principal, and Mr. W. T. Johnson, agricultural education teacher, are demonstrating the use of the video-tape equipment to be used to allow teachers to view themselves on the TV screen for self-evaluation - a process known as micro-teaching.

FLUE-CURED TOBACCO FARM LOAN PROGRAM ANNOUNCED

The U.S. Department of Agriculture today announced an interim price support loan program for the 1972 crop of flue-cured tobacco stored on farms.

The program is designed to provide flue-cured tobacco growers cash needed to complete the harvesting and curing of their crops and to facilitate orderly marketing. Department spokesmen pointed out that because of the general rush to market many producers are having difficulties obtaining space on the warehouse floors. Loans under the program will provide immediate cash even though the tobacco is not sold until a later date.

Under the program announced today, the grower may request a farm storage loan on flue-cured tobacco at his local ASCS county office, in the same manner as for farm storage loans on grain and other commodities. A representative of the ASC county committee will visit the farm to inspect the tobacco for quality and to estimate the total poundage. If the tobacco is of average quality or better, an interim loan at the rate of 55 cents a pound for regular varieties, or 28 cents for discount varieties, will be made on that portion of his production which has not been marketed, up to 110 percent of his farm's poundage quota.

A loan cannot be obtained by a farmer who has failed to comply with his farm's acreage allotment, or who has been found to have used DDT or TDE on his tobacco after it was transplanted in the field. Also, a loan cannot be obtained on tobacco which is subject to lien unless the lien-holder waives his prior rights. The tobacco upon which a loan has been obtained will be sealed, and retained in storage facilities which must be of a type that will maintain the quality of the tobacco, until it is eventually sold at the warehouse.

Any grower who obtains a loan on a portion of his tobacco, then harvests, cures and stores more of it later, may obtain a second loan on the later harvested leaf, up to a season total of 110 percent of the farm's poundage quota less any quantity already marketed or placed under loan. A loan-handling service charge of $8 will be deducted from each loan at the time it is made, the same as for grain and other farm-stored commodities.

When the tobacco upon which a loan has been obtained is sold at auction, the amount of the loan plus interest at 20 cents for each $100 for each month or fraction thereof will be deducted by the warehouse. If the tobacco is delivered to the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corporation, only the principal of the loan will be deducted. If the amount of money received for the tobacco in the market or from the Stabilization Corporation does not equal the amount of the loan, the grower will be required to pay the difference.

Flue-cured tobacco is grown in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.
